PREFACE

The second edition, completely revised, of this informal short-title check-list of references for students of the language and literature of England and the United States has been prepared because the first edition went out of print years earlier than was expected. Exhaustiveness is not intended in any one of the fields touched upon or in citing records of publication. Since the titles are taken from the books themselves, normalization has not been attempted, although many titles have been shortened to conserve space. It is not my purpose to make this list authoritative; my desire has been simply to compile a brief list of references which will aid the student during the initial stages of investigation. Every user of the manual will wish to add his own favorite items. Inasmuch as all fields overlap, the scheme here drawn up must be regarded as nothing more than a practical device to enable the student to get at the individual items. I have tried to avoid the application of rigidly logical principles and at the same time to preserve the virtues of a definite scheme. In the main, the needs of the classroom are made subsidiary to the needs of the investigator.

The Table of Contents constitutes a subject-index. The student who examines it closely will be rewarded many times over in the time and effort which he will save. In general, every section or sub-section should be regarded as a cross-reference to every other; and although some cross-references have been included under individual entries and after the various sub-sections, the process has not been carried out as far as the student himself will wish to carry it. In answer to widespread demand, an index has been added.

Special attention must be directed to my arrangement of learned journals in Section XIII. Many learned journals publish materials in several fields, and therefore XIII B had to be a miscellaneous group. In general, these journals publish articles on any period of the language and literature of England and the United States as well as on any period of the languages and literatures of France, Germany, Spain, Italy, and so on. Hence this heterogeneous class. On the other hand, some learned journals are devoted to the study of special periods, special subjects, or to the language and literature of individual countries. Hence the sub-classes under XIII B. No scheme, of course, can ever supply a satisfactory substitute for individual intelligence and initiative. The person interested in American literature, say, will quickly perceive that he will need to use not only all of XIV B with care, but Part One in general, IV B, VII A 4, VII B 2, X, XI, XII, XIII B, XIII D, XIII E, XIII F, XIII G 6, XV C, XVI C, XVIII A 4, XIX C, XX C 3, XX D 3, and XX E; but he will make many a false start unless he masters also the titles listed in I, and unless he actually handles a majority of the books listed in the manual.

Bibliographies of individual writers presented a special problem. The number had to be strictly limited if the cost of the manual was to be kept low. Since bringing up to date bibliographically the study of a given writer is less exacting than other tasks in bibliography, the decision was made to include only the major writers most likely to be of interest to every user of the manual.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many members, present and past, of the Department of English at Northwestern University have lent practical aid, among them Messrs. L. B. Beach, W. F. Bryan, A. E. Case, F. E. Faverty, Z. S. Fink, H. C. Heffner, V. B. Heltzel, Leon Howard, T. O. Mabbott, A. H. Nethercot, W. R. Parker, M. E. Prior, and G. K. Smart. In the School of Speech, Messrs. R. T. Carhart, C. C. Cunningham, J. H. McBurney, and C. T. Simon have done the like. Professor Archer Taylor of the University of California has given good advice. The staffs of the Newberry Library, of the Northwestern University Library, and of the Duke University Library have gone out of their way to help me.
